WIN + SERIAL.KEY.HD.. rs.Concentration and distribution of morphological and biochemical markers of cell membrane damage in normal and pathological human semen. We investigated the concentration and distribution of various biochemical and morphological markers of cell membrane damage in normal and pathological human semen. The following tests were performed on semen from normozoospermic men: morphological analysis; evaluation of membrane vesiculation, membrane permeability, and hypospermia; and measurement of DNA and protein (using a fluorescent technique) content in ejaculated (n = 24) and surgically removed (n = 10) spermatozoa. Membrane permeability was found to be normal in 96.4% of
